METHOD: Weigh the wire/rod by weight and calculate the average of the volume using the cross sectional area and thickness of the wire/rod. RESULTS: The mean weight is 34.3 g (0.0246 kg) in length, 0.0920 g (0.000037 kg) in diameter. The average volume is 4.09 cm³ (13.21 cm³). The maximum volume is 9.12 cm³ (29.62 cm³) and the minimum volume is 0.75 cm³ (2.42 cm³) in this experiment. The modulus of rigidity is 1.024. CONCLUSION: The average modulus of rigidity in the present experiment is 1.024. (Ref. 32) THOMPSON, S. C. Physiology and Pharmacology of the Eye and Intraocular Pressure Diabetes & Metabolism Research; Proceedings of the 4th World Congress Status of Current Treatment of Glaucoma DIABETIC NEPHROPATHY ABSTRACT The last 30 years have witnessed many technological advancements in the treatment of glaucoma. But still the mechanism of the disease remains unknown and one drug cannot fit all. The treatment of glaucoma in diabetic patients is very different from that in non-diabetics. Newer and more potent glaucoma drugs are available but still the management remains a challenge. The major goal of therapy should be to lower the intraocular pressure to prevent the untoward effects of elevated IOP. The hypotensive effect of drugs is minimal and diabetics are at high risk for complications such as retinal damage. The management should start with proper control of diabetes and a safer medication is preferred for diabetics with glaucoma. The blood glucose levels must be kept between 70--180 mg/dl before the administration of hypotensive drugs to prevent the adverse effects of drugs. Non-selective beta-blockers should be avoided in diabetics because of their hyperglycemic action. There are a number of newer medications available but the exact mechanism of action is not known and the patient compliance is a problem. The studies regarding the mode of action of some drugs are more in favor of peripheral actions rather than the intraocular. The time 82157476af
